Report from a first-time indigo-dyeing experience

Skilled professionals will kindly teach the ways of indigo dyeing, so even first-time dyers can enjoy the experience in a relaxed environment.

Please note that the order of steps (etc.) of an experience varies by workshop.

1 Choose the material and pattern to dye

We decided to dye a handkerchief and scarf. We were able to choose which pattern to dye while browsing through samples. Depending on the shade of indigo and pattern you decide to dye, the dyeing process will be different.

2 Preparing the materials

We decided to dye the handkerchief in the random, white cloud-like "Murakumo-zome" color scheme and the scarf in the indigo-to-white gradation "Dan-zome" color design.

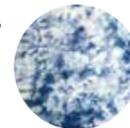

"Murakumo-zome" coloring

You bunch and squeeze the material together.

The color pattern is created by the overlapping of material. I wonder what the design will look like in the end!

This is what it should look like!

"Dan-zome" coloring

You cover the parts you don't want to dye with vinyl wrap and tie it together with rubber bands.

You made the gradation design by dyeing specific sections and by soaking the material several times.

This is what it should look like!

3 Dyeing

We were told to soak the material in the indigo dyeing liquid for 3 minutes and then to take it out and expose the material to the air for 3 minutes. We repeated this process several times.

① Soak material in the dye (3min)

The liquid is a little warm, isn't it?

My arms are getting tired!

Open and spread the scarf so that its entirety can be exposed to the air.

② Expose material to air (3min)

When the material is exposed to the air, the color of the dye changes due to oxidation.

③ Repeat steps ① & ②

When we removed the part of the scarf that was soaking in the dye, the dyed color became even darker!

I was able to create a pretty dye job on my first try!

It turned out just like I imagined!

I wonder how it will turn out?

4 Wash the material to finish!

After we finished dyeing the material, we cleaned it up by washing away the remaining, unnecessary dye. The indigo color turned out beautiful! We were told that if you wash the material thoroughly, that the dye actually becomes more resistant to fading.

Introduction to indigo factories in Tokushima City

Dyeing with Ai

This magical blue indigo color, known as "Japan Blue", is well revered around the world. Indigo dyeing, which is expressed through the unique shading of indigo, is simple but profound. Try indigo dyeing for yourself, taught by dyeing professionals of whom have learned the craft throughout generations.

Tokushima, the home of indigo dyeing

Tokushima has been the number one producer of the natural dye "Sukumo" since the Edo period. Sukumo from Tokushima = Awa Ai. Awa Ai's high quality distinguishes it from other indigo plants.

Beautiful appearance for practical items

Natural indigo dye is not only beautiful, but also gentle on the skin and has antibacterial and insect repellent effects. The indigo dye is also said to have a heat retaining effect and to be good for promoting good circulation.

※ Polyester, nylon, and other synthetic materials cannot be dyed. ※ Wool may shrink. ※ Price is based per 1 person
